Session Speakers #10

Conditions for Individuals with Mental Illness in Multnomah County's Jails

Summary

Advocates and public safety administrators have a shared interest in keeping people out of jail if what they really need is behavioral health services, and in improving conditions and services for people with mental illness who do end up in jail. There is broad agreement to reorient correctional operations and link individuals to a variety of external services and providers to better protect those in custody, public safety members, and the community alike.

Students will receive an overview of conditions and services for adults in custody with behavioral health issues and the efforts underway to coordinate and improve outcomes.

Learning Objectives

- Overview and understanding of current conditions for inmates with mental illness.
- Reading from “A Merry Go Round That Never Stops: Mental Illness in the Multnomah County Detention Center.”
- State and Federal legal expectations for inmates with mental illness.
- Status of reform efforts at Multnomah County Detention Center.
